Grandpa Rome and Germania

Rome is ranting to Germania again.

[Explanation]

The setting is Europe BC.

It is the age of Rome and Germania.

This time, he was feeling a bit down.

Then I got in a brawl with some punks and sent 'em crying to their mamma!

The booze from that place rocked my world. I got plastered!

Dude, I saw this hot girl, and I swear she was totally into me!

Veh veh veh veh veh!

Alas.

You can always beat him next time, right?

Don't feel bad.

Japan saved my life!
In 1880 a Turkish navy vessel named the Giritbirdi crashed on the shores of Japan's Wakayama Prefecture. During that time the Japanese villagers diligently worked to rescue the survivors. When Japanese officers were stranded in Iran during the Iran-Iraq War in 1985, Turkish volunteers risked their lives and sent a commercial plane to rescue the Japanese. This was supposedly done in part because of Japan's actions in 1880.

Greek Mythology is Totally Hard Core

The stories in Greek Mythology are way more interesting than the soap operas we have today. One minute Zeus is battling his own father to become the king of the gods, and the next minute he transforms himself into a bull so he can cheat on his wife! But at the end of the day, even the mighty Zeus cowers before Hera, making him the kind of endearing rascal that we all love to root for.

Liechtenstein's Doting Brother Diaries 1

Since Liechtenstein and Switzerland have a customs agreement, travelers are free to go back and forth between the two nations. In addition, if someone tries to get into Liechtenstein from the Austrian border, they will have to go through Swiss customs—not Liechtenstein customs. In other words, because Liechtenstein is not in charge of its own customs inspections, there is no customs stamp. However, tourists who enter Liechtenstein can receive a commemorative stamp with a crown detail if they like.

(Liechtenstein's military)

Liechtenstein does not have a military organization of its own, and their entire police force only consists of about 70 officers. As a result, they are reliant on the watchful protection of Switzerland.

Wideski fart about Liechtenstein!

Liechtenstein was accidentally invaded by Switzerland in 2007.

Apparently, the Swiss army "got lost, and the worst thing they knew, they wandered in and invaded Liechtenstein." Liechtenstein's response to this incident was, "Well, those things happen."

March 29, 2003.

Although Liechtenstein is the fourth smallest nation in the world, the EURO 2004 soccer preliminaries were held at their stadium.

An interesting incident occurred during the match between Liechtenstein and England.

Liechtenstein and England's national anthems have the same melody.

So when both countries' anthems were played before the match, the English proudly sang "God Save the Queen" twice, even though many thought it was a bit odd.

Liechtenstein is always the underdog in the group, but they were able to score one point during their EURO match with Macedonia. Liechtenstein's defense was also quite solid during the England match.

Liechtenstein's Doting Brother Diaries 2

At the end of World War 1, Liechtenstein, which was not even involved in the war itself, was tossed into economic turmoil and major food shortages. Luckily for them, Switzerland reached out to save them in their darkest hour. Apparently, helping this tiny neighboring nation with a population of less than 10,000 was done from the notion of "Solidarität" or "Solidarity." Switzerland did not expect anything in return.
